

THE DALRYMPLE-CHAMPNEYS AWARD CRITERIA FOR CITATIONS

The Dalrymple-Champneys Selection Committee invites nominations for the 2022 Award

The Dalrymple-Champneys Award is presented to a member of the British Veterinary Association to mark and recognise work of outstanding merit which, it is considered, will encourage the advancement of veterinary science and medicine.

The Award shall be made to the author of work which is considered to be of outstanding merit, pertaining to any branch of veterinary science. The Award shall also be open to those who have done work which has not been published, or have undertaken other activities which are considered to have encouraged the advancement - and dissemination of knowledge - of veterinary science and medicine.

Who can nominate

Nominations can be made by BVA members or BVA divisions.

How to nominate

Nominations should be presented using the nomination form under the following headings:

- i) supporting statement summarising the nominee's most distinctive contribution to the advancement of veterinary science (max 100 words);
- ii) significant contributions to the advancement of knowledge in veterinary science and medicine citing the ten most significant refereed publications with an indication of what each publication contributed; or up to ten most significant other scientific contributions; or a combination of both up to a maximum of ten, which enhance the reputation of veterinary science.

Some nominees may have only very limited refereed publications but may have contributed significantly in identifying - and disseminating knowledge of - some important clinical or scientific condition or its associations.

However well-known the nominee may be in a particular field of expertise, the nominator should assume that their candidate may be unknown to the Selection Committee.

A short curriculum vitae (maximum 2 pages) should also be submitted.

Nominations for the 2022 Award may be submitted online or by e-mail to Helena Cotton at helenac@bva.co.uk no later than Friday 10 June 2022.
